Climate Alliance

Welcome to Perugia!

With the disappointing Copenhagen Summit behind us, one fact is clear: the fight against climate change will not be won without the crucial contribution of towns, cities, provinces and regions. They have been forerunners in the past and will continue to play a central role in the post-2012 treaty hopefully agreed upon in December in Mexico.

The International Climate Alliance Conference Perugia 2010 - "Local Solutions for Change," on April 14th through 16th, will be an important occasion to together define climate strategies for the next decades. It is therefore with great pleasure, and with the firm intent to contribute to our common effort to save the climate, that the Region of Umbria, the Province of Perugia and the City of Perugia invite you to participate in the International Climate Conference Perugia 2010.

We have joined forces with a group of some of the most important and significant institutions in the area to welcome our Italian and European guests. Our joint commitment to this conference and to the cause of climate protection will send a strong signal in supporting the major collaborative commitment that will be necessary to address the huge tasks before us. We await you in Perugia, to join with us in discussing the most advanced strategies and solutions in our joint effort to confront and combat climate change.

Wladimiro Boccali
Mayor of Perugia

Marco Vinicio Guasticchi
President Province of Perugia

Maria Rita Lorenzetti
President Region of Umbria

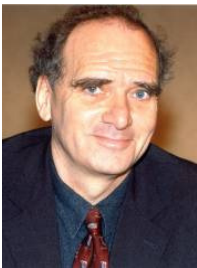

Let us jointly implement the Solutions for Change!

2010 marks 20 years of Climate Alliance! Currently, more than 1,500 member cities and municipalities in our network have committed to the ambitious Climate Alliance target and are developing and implementing the "Local Solutions for Change". The members have made this commitment not only for the protection of the global climate, but also for local economy and welfare in the current and expected times of energy crisis. The challenge before us is to embark, in accordance with the other important actors, towards energy autonomy and a post-petrol system of mobility, moving from scattered pilot projects to mainstreamed policies.

The same is true on a global scale: The cooperation with the indigenous peoples – self-evident for Climate Alliance – has more and more become a cornerstone in the road-map process from Bali to Copenhagen. The protection of the rainforests is crucial to stabilise greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere and to preserve biodiversity. Indigenous peoples are not only the first victims of climate change, but are also important partners in developing solutions.

Perugia 2010 is the time to celebrate Climate Alliance's first 20 years and the successes achieved, and is also the time to take off – bound and determined – for even more ambitious steps towards a sustainable energy future. These steps can be far-reaching, if undertaken together with different levels of government. We thank the three hosts of our Annual Conference 2010, for acting as the concrete proof of this cooperation to implement coherent and effective climate action.

Twin Cities united in Climate Action

Perugia and its twin cities look back on a long partnership with intensive exchange, predominantly in the field of culture. With the need to create new alliances to master the challenges of our cities; this event is a way to extend our close relationship into the field of environmental policies and climate protection.

As an introduction to Climate Alliance's International Annual Conference, the actions and achievements of our cities in the fields of energy efficient buildings, renewable energy, sustainable mobility, urban planning and greening our economies shall be presented in a festive atmosphere.

A new Landscape for Energy Autonomy?

The landscape of Umbria or, in general, the landscape of central Italy, is appreciated in the whole world for its beauty and harmony. The economical and social transformation as well as the technical developments in the last decades have significantly changed this precious cultural heritage – unfortunately in most cases not for the better. Energy production from windmills, solar and biomass plants confront us with new challenges to reconcile visions of a decentral energy supply and landscape conservation, also in the framework of an active participation of the citizens. The workshop will discuss criteria and experiences.

Covenant of Mayors THEMATIC MORNING

The Covenant of Mayors is the first European Commission initiative directly targeting local authorities to take the lead in combating climate change. All Covenant of Mayors signatories make a voluntary commitment to go beyond the EU objectives in terms of CO₂ emission reduction. In the consortium managing the Covenant of Mayors Office, Climate Alliance is running the Covenant Helpdesk and developing methodological tools to provide all Covenant signatories with guidance on how to prepare and implement their Baseline Emission Inventory and Sustainable Energy Action Plan.

The Search for a Fair Climate Future

Prof. Dr. Carlo C. Jaeger, Potsdam Institute for Climate Impact Research

The key speaker of our Annual Conference 2010 is the head of the research domain Transdisciplinary Concepts & Methods. His current research is dedicated to the ethics and economics of the climate crisis, proposing new models to share responsibility and commitment in climate change mitigation.

10:15 – 11:15 Taking Ambitious Commitments – and then?

Committing to energy and climate targets (as a member of Climate Alliance or by signing-up the Covenant of Mayors) is a start for the development and implementation of ambitious strategies for energy efficiency, energy production from renewable energy sources, carbon-free transport or sustainable procurement, but:

How can the local authorities meet their own commitments? How do they proceed? What methodology and tools do they use? How do they finance the preparation and implementation of their action plan?

Sustainable Energy Action Plans – Kick-off for coherent energy action
