	With the growth of the Alzheimer movement, more and more associations are establishing local or regional branches or chapters. Or it is the other way around, where local or regional associations create a national umbrella or federation. In any case it is good to look at the structure of an organisation. This session will show several models on how to do that and discuss the pros and cons of each of them using examples from the real world: United States, Germany and Thailand. We want to see what we can learn from them and discuss if there is a perfect model.

12:45 - 13:45 Special Symposium - National Alzheimer and Dementia Strategies

Location: Room 201 BC
Chair: TBC

Speakers: Representative from the government of Taiwan, Anne Margriet Pot, Netherlands and Marc Wortmann, UK

This session gives an overview of national Alzheimer and dementia strategies from various countries and touches on the success factors and how ADI can support efforts to develop a national strategy. Australia was the first country in the world where the government decided to make dementia a national health priority in 2005 and created a National Framework for Action on Dementia 2006-2010. After that, this commitment continued and even became stronger. The Minister of Mental Health and Ageing of Australia, the Hon. Mark Butler, will talk about his program. A representative from the government of Taiwan will tell us about the policies in our host country. Professor Anne Margriet Pot from Free University Amsterdam is producing a report for ADI with a comparison of national strategies and will touch on the key factors to make these successful. Finally Marc Wortmann, Executive Director of ADI, will show how ADI can support Alzheimer associations and governments that want to make a national plan or strategy.
