The city of Perugia

Perugia currently holds the Polis presidency. It is the capital city of the Umbria region in Central Italy and a classic example of an Italian fortified hill-top city. This characteristic, combined with other factors such as its location as a key business and tourist centre as well as the growth of semiautonomous suburbs with their own commercial centres, have created some travel access challenges.

In response to these challenges, Perugia has planned an innovative and sustainable transport system, which uses advanced solutions for accessing the historical centre. The new system is to be integrated with the traditional transport system. It is designed to encourage a cultural change in reducing car use and promoting intermodality and alternative modes of transport. Conference guests will have the opportunity to see the measures being implemented during their stay in Perugia.
